On their return to Antares, ground control discovered a slight oxygen leak in Comdr. Mitchell's spacesuit all but ruled out hopes that the second moonwalk tomorrow could last even longer.

. Roosa Orbits Moon

The third member of the Apollo-14 crew, Maj. Stuart A, Rocsa, orbited the moon alone in the command ship, Kitty Hawk, during the moonwalk. He maneuvered his ship to a position where he could see the Fra Maoro area and the shadow cast by the lunar lander.

The successful landing erased the stigma of Apollo-13, which had been headed for the same site when an oxygen-tank explosion in space forced the astronauts to return home last April

Capt. Shepard flew Antares to a near-perfect landing between two runged ridges, setting down in a cloud of dust only 130 feet from the target-the most pre-cise landing of the Apollo migsions.

Touchdown on the moon came at 0918 GMT-1 minute 15 secands behind schedule.

The extra time was used up by Capt. Shepard's course corrections in the speeding descent and his extra care in picking a flot landing sight in the hilly region.

At 170 feet above the surface, Capt. Shepard hovered the crait for longer than planned, halanging upright on its column of rocket exhaust, while he looked for a level spot in the difficult terrain.

The accurate landing was made with a makeshift procedure radioed to the astronauts at the last moment, after Capt. Shepard and Comdr. Mitchell discovered a faulty abort switch two hours before landing.

Dust Hazard Cut Sharply On Antares

Earlier Apollo Made Blind Landing

By Richard Witkin

NEW YORK, Feb. 5 (NYT). -Because dust churned by the spacecraft's rocket engine added so much to the hazards of the Apollo-12 moon landing in 1969, the Apollo-14 vehicle was equipped with a modified con-trol system to simplify the final maneuvers.

What the space agency. en gineers did, essentially, was to make some intricate changes in a computer program for the lunar module's primary guid-

The change promised one great advantage. In the final moments of the landing, when dust could be expected again to obliterate the view from the cockpit window, the two astro-nauts on hoard could delegate to the computer the job of halting any horizontal space-craft motion — forward, back, right of left.

In effect, they could make an automatic, hands-off landing.

The Apollo-13 moon landing, which spurred the change, proved in retrospect to have than it seemed at the time. The crew chief pilot, Comdr. Charles Conrad jr., maneuvered the two-man lunar module over a relatively clear spot thet looked favorable for a landing. He thought he was about 1,000 feet from an abandoned Surveyor vehicle in a crater that served as a landmark, and about 500 feet from the crater'e edge. He began descending the final few hundred feet, at the same time seeking to halt any horizontal motion with a control stick in his right hand. The dust storm enveloped the craft. The pilot could no longer guard sgainst horizontal movements by watching the ground; he had to shift to gauges on the dashboard. However, the pointers were unsettling to follow because they jiggled and wobbled more than they should have. Comdr. Conrad let the craft continue, its descent to the surface, figuring that he had been over a good spot and had eliminated most, if not all, horizontal movement. The outcome was fine. Nevertheless, the touchdown was 500 feet closer to the Surveyor than the pilot had expected, and just 20 feet from the edge of the Officiels say thet the crater wall was shallow enough to keep the lunar craft upright. But work was started to avoid a repétition of Condr. Conrad's battle with the dust.

good for blast-off from the moon. Eight degrees presents no problem. On the ground, the astro-nauts' families and ground controllers whooped with delight as the astronauts reported 55 Minutes Late The astronauts spent almost five hours between the landing and moonwalk getting the An-tares shipshape, eating lunch and donning their bulky white moon suits. They were 55 min-utes late getting out of the lander because of trouble with their backpack communications. Capt. The first reaction here to President Sadats offer to reopen the Suez Canal to world shipping if Israel withdraws its troops from the castern bank during the new truce period was that the offer is not necessarily related to the future of the cease-fire but, rather, reprasents a new negotiating position.

In a sense, some officials sug-gested, Mr. Sadat may have been trying to show a new flexibility in demanding, in the immediate fa-ture, only a partial Israeli withdrawal from occupied Arab terri-

Cartographer

HOUSTON, Feb. 5 (WP).--Fra Mauro, the Apollo-14 land-ing site, was named for an Italian monk who 33 years before. Christopher Columbus drew a remarkably accurate map of the known world in the shape of a wheel. Fra Mauro's 1457 map now hangs in the Doge's Palace in Venice, where he lived.

Map experts at the Library of Congress describe it as the greatest expression of Renaissance mapmaking. Fra Mauro's map shows Africa and Asia more accurately than anything that had been done previously. His name was attached to the highland area of the moon by Joannes Riccioli, a Jesuit astron-come to the point of haggling over an "embargo" on the fact that there is an "embargo" on the existence of an "embargo" on a background press conference," they are talking to themselves, as far as the public is concerned, and this is always a bad sign. When the subject at hand is what the U.S. government is up to in Vietnam and the result is very nearly a total breakdown of the power to communicate-both ways-it is worse than a had sign; it begins to approach a crisis in the capacity to govern in a free society.

Withont reciting the full history of the Tamous "embargo on the embargo," it is enough to note that it began with a relative-Iv routine "background" press conference by Gen. Abrams in Salgon last week, in which he outlined to newsmen the details of a very large prospective joint operation by American and South Vietnamese troops aimed at enemy infiltration routes through Laos and into the northern provinces of South Vietnam. The information was to he held for release, presumably until the military felt its publication would not endanger the operation, which is also fairly standard procedure; an embargo, which is to say news blackout, was also placed upon the fact that the backgrounder had even taken place. Naturally, bits and pieces of the news leaked out, as they always do (usually to reporters who were not there and therefore were not bound by the embargo's terms). And so the newspapers and networks who were represented were confronted with rumors and speculations which they could not print themselves, but which they also could not ignore. So they did their own speculating, on the basis of what was being published elsewhere, and at this point things began to get rough.

In Salgon and in Washington, officials tried to nall down the news lid by threatening to take away the Vietnam press credentials of at least three newspapers, including this one; White House Press Secretary Ron Ziegler joined in this game, with a warning of deep trouble for one offender. There were ugly insinuations about "endangering the lives of American troops"-another familiar feature of these affairs which conveniently ignores the chronic inability to maintain security in an undeclared and unconventional war in which the conventional instrument of censorship cannot be employed. For reasons not readily explicable, this embargo dragged on far longer than most: it was extended twice, by which time its existence, and much of the information it sought

When reporters and government officials to conceal, was common knowledge to anybody who was interested.

The question is why, and to be perfectly frank about it, we don't know. But it does seem to us that the answer-or any fault -lies with the military, or with Pentagon, information officers; the beleaguered Mr. Friedheim was obviously encumbered by strict instructions from on high. Somebody presumably saw some virtue in sticking stontly to a blackout on information about this operation long after the secrecy could do anything but harm. And this is precisely the point that we would make-there does not seem to be any realization among the powers that be in this administration of the sensitivity of the poblic mood to secrecy and obfuscations-to the same old shell game that has concealed almost every new twist and turn in the Vietnam war for so long. It is all very well to talk about the need for surprise and the security of our troops; almost anybody can appreciate these concerns. And it is only fair to say that if you read the public pronouncements of administration spokesmen with great care, and are disposed to believe what they say, there are logical enough explanations for what is going on now. Even Secretary Laird has been quite explicit about the limitations on our intentions at times and Secretary Rogers has talked in even plainer terms; we are getting oot ... "We couldn't change that under any conditions"; we are not committed to Cambodia's defense; we will not nse American ground troops in Cambodia or Laos; we are bombing in Cambodia and Laos because that huys time for Vietnamization and for our withdrawal from the war.

It may not be the best answer, but it is rational. Except that Mr. Rogers also is capable of saying that "we do not rule out the use of air power to support Asians in any effort that they make to fight a common enemy," and it was his equivocation over the possibility of some new incursion into Laos that, rightly or wrongly, gave rise to a good part of the speculation during the time the embargo was supposedly in force

So it comes down to communicating, in an atmosphere of extreme mistrust, with a public and with politicians who are ready to suspect the worst because that, by and large, is what in the past years they have come to expect. This is what makes it so difficult to understand why the administration kept its starchy silence for almost a week while speculation mounted steadily about "new invasions" and "expanded war" and "changes in policy" of which, there is, at least so far, no evidence.

A-Arms and Vietnam

The Peb. 3 solition of you newspaper carries an article by C.L. Sulzberger, "Kriegspiel" in Victnam," in which a recent work of mine is quoted entirely out of and lectures at the War-Colleges context. It has been made to seen that I would "excuse," and pos-shly savis, the miclearization of the war in Vietnem. I am furtherpictured as being callous to the use of nuclear weapons against mainland China. And if that were not enotigh, we are told that my article has very likely confused and tarrified political and military leaders in Communist capitals.

I should have expected better of Mr. Sulsbarger. What he implies is absurd. The official abstract of the article, a technical work ap-pearing in a special number of The Annuals of the American Academy in Political and Social Science" devoted to "How Wars End" makes my intention crystal clear: "Examining traditional con-cepts of warfare, the author finds that civilians have not normally been considered appropriate targets of violence and that divilian productivity and homefront morale are largely frelevant in conditions of thermonuclear war ... There are thus important motal and practical reasons for adopting open cities' and sanctuary policies to spare civilians and reduce over-all deaths. Three cases are examined in detail: open cities and sanctuary policies . . . at the time of a hypothetical war with the U.S.S.R. war, sgain hypothetical, with mainland Chins." Nuclear war is not a pleasant subject to discuss under any cirby the thousands and some of us do not think it inhumane to ask how they might be used short of in-discriminate slaughter. Introducing the scenarios themselves is the additional disclaimer: "The scena-rios will be very cutsory; the purpose is only to illuminate a few possibilities for the use of sinc-tuaries, not to aid the initiation or fighting of a nuclear war." Mr. Subberger seems to think I am unawars of the political repercussions that would follow their use. But on the Chinese scenario itself, I concluded with the warning: "We have, of course, left out of our consideration the reactions of the Soviet Union, other political organizations ... that might be against our policy, and some of the possible adverse reactions of the Chinese themselves. Any or all of these might change the above scenario enormously . . . We are therefore not arguing for the in-vasion of North Vietnam or the Bern. States." I suppose it will always be one of the unavoidable penalties of a free society that popular journalists get hold of technical works they are not competent to read. But again, as I have said, I would have expected better of Mr. Sulzberger. In any event there remains the question of my actual record. and advice on Vietnam. The re-verse of what Mr. Sulsberger imus are supposed to believe meanplies is the case: I have been supercity against our Indochinese solventure, in print, since 1961, side my books: "The New Politics," "The Politics of Hysteria" and "Power and Impotence."

Since 1965 in Pentagon briefings and Service Academies I have re-peatedly warned against committing American lives and interests to a marginal and unworthy war. Never denying the price that would have to be paid, I have uniformly scriped that we cut our losses and get out. When the late Sen. Robert Kennedy was shot, I was even then, at his request, in process of drafting a position paper for him entitled "No More Vietnams."

Does Mr. Suizberger think as he reads today's news from Camoodia and Laos that a last desperate venture, an invasion of North Victnam, is wholly out of the ques tion? Does he think it impossible, if America were to invade the North, that ultimately the Chinese might intervene too? If, as I postulated in my hypothetical, there had been a massive Amarican defeat, would the American people really sphor the use of muclear weapons against the Chinese "to save American lives"?

Mr. Sukterger states: "I cannot personally imagine any scenario bringing mucheer weepons into in-dochine." I do not think the United States is going to use nuclear weapons against anybody for a long time to come. But what Mr. Suisberger says tells us a good deal more about the limitations of imagination than about the plausible terrors of this world.

A Decision

Writing to the Herald Tribune these days usually requires making a decision: whether to challenge those readers who seem to feel if their duty to regularly write in and misinform us, on Southeast Asia, or whether to examine column by column (word by word in some cases would be more realistic), the utterances of your more recently acquired (and tendentions) political, columnistssuch as Mr. Anthony Lewis.

After writing several dozen letters in my head on the subject, I've accepted the impracticality of my ambition to debunk all the bunk. For example, just to shoot down the latest escalation of humbug from some Professor Taylor (who might give thought to indicting the two Roosevells, Truman and Abs Incoin for war crimes) would swell this finy columo) into a whole newspaper,

U.S. Defense Outlays There are some interesting facts to be gleaned from Mr. Mixon's budget picture for the coming two years (IHT Jan. 30-81, 1971).

For instance in spito of Mr. Nizon's avowed drastic reductions in defense the budget remains at an enormously high figure, $76.443 billion. Whom are we defending us against for all this m whom do we expect to defend during the years to come? On the tion's promise to put an end to the undeclared war in Southe Asia and bring our boys home and on the other hand we have a high defense budget, some 35.9 percent By comparison, the proposed budget for education and manpower, subjects of extreme necessity in our country, receive a more 3.9 percent. Community Development and Housing, another sore point, will get 1.8 percent, Health 7 percent and International affairs 1.6 percent. Thus, education, community derelopment, housing, health and international affairs together receive 14.3 percent-ridiculous when we consider that the means to survive in this world of ours are based on at least three of the latter four categories. health, education and community development. Insofar as international affairs are concerned, we reak among the most disliked nations in this world, thus 1.e. percent or nothing at all is Rolls-Royce, the huge British acrospace company which also makes one of the world's finest automobiles, has gone into receivership and the British government calls its demise "a major national tragedy.". Rolls's failure resulted from soaring costs in the development of an engine for the American Lockheed Aircraft Corp.'s TriStar jetliner, the L-1011.

The British government has said it would take over Rolls's engine operations that it regarded as vital to national defense, but has left open the question of continuing production of the TriStar engine, called the RB-211, whose costs have soared more than $100 million above the fixed price.

Just two days carifer, Lockheed itself escaped bankruptcy by agreeing to take a fixed loss of $200 million on its controversial C-5A jet transport for the United States Air Force, rather than go to litigation. Lockheed's creditors-including many hanks and airlines_regarded the Pentagon's offer as a generous proposal, designed to rescue the company from bankruptcy. The settlement will still cost American taxpayers an estimated $781 million.

Daniel J. Haughton, Lockheed's chairman, informed Lockheed's stockholders a few days ago that the company was proceeding "satisfactorily" to negotiate new arrangements with its lending banks to get "additional financing for our L-1011 Tristar passenger transport and other programs," and that it would now "move quickly to the news blackout is supposed to formalize the C-5A, Cheyenne (helicopter) fool, but why so much U.S. air and ship construction settlements so as to assure uninterrupted progress."

The collapse of Rolls-Royce now reopens . the issue, both for the U.S. government and men now compare favorably with for Lockheed's private creditors, of how much further they can go to rescue the company. On the British side, the minister of aviation, Frederick Corfield, told a stunned House of Commons that his government is undertaking "urgent discussions" with Lockheed and the United States government. A congressional investigation into the problems of cost overruns and managerial performance at Lockheed-and other defense contractors-has become imperative before the U.S. government plunges ahead with another rescue operation. With the defense budget heading up again, it is more urgent than ever that more effective controla he established over both how defense procurement is conducted and, even more importantly, what the military decides to procure.

The Shah Gets Tough

The shah's message to the oil companies is tough. The demand for a 25 percent increase in the income of the oil-producing states is going to have deep effects, but the dimension of the increase is tolerable. The oil companies have done well during the past decade. Between 1959 and 1989 the revenue derived by the OPEC countries from oil rose by 8 percent. This would have done no more than offset the past three years' worth of imported manufactured goods.

Effectively, the value to these countries of their chief resource depreciated. But the future of oil as a source of energy should weigh just as heavily with producers as with consumers. World resources of oil are reckoned to last three years at current levels of consumption. Unless new or alternative sources of energy are developed with unforeseen rapidity, the bargaining the whole question of withdrawal power of the oil-producing countries will wane before their resources do.

led more and more people to favor some form of governmental control or influence on the wage-fixing process. Jawboning, incomes poli-cy, formal controls-all these have support now among businessmen and economists who not long ago shuddered at such restraints on market forces. They simply see no other realistic way to prevent dangerously de-stabilising inflation.

Alternative Plan

'Mr. Heath, a committed opponent of government intervention and controls, has been trying to work out an alternative anti-inflation policy. It consists of exhibitation in the private sector and firmness in the public, applied in an ad hoc way to push the level of wage settlements gradually down.

That was the logic behind the tough government stand against workers in the nationalized electrical industry before Christinas, and It is the reason for the continuing refusal to offer more than 8 percent to the postal workers who have been on strike for hearly three weeks. It is the basis of appeals that officials have been making to private employers to stand firm against big wage claims,

A few months ago no serious economic analyst thought Mr. Heath's strategy could work. Now many would concede that it does have some chance of lowering the level of settlements and thus reducing the rate of inflation. There is a distinct sense of company backbones stiffening against union demands.

The reason for the Heath policy's chance of success is not only, or mostly, rhetoric. It is the growing awareness of union members that British companies with excessive wage bills may very easily go under. That was why employees of British European Airways re-

Most of the experts still doubt that Mr. Heath's ad hoc inspiration and occasional fact-finding boards will do the trick on inflation. They think he will have to have general

Theater in London_ 2 Plays Offer Food For Philosophizing

By John Walker

LONDON, Feb. 5.-It has been a great week for philosophia great week for philosophi-cal speculation, on such matters as 'lusion and reality and the substance and purpose of the theatrical experience. By its nature, the stage is an ideal place to mirror, if not answer, the first problem and, for art's sake, is spending more and more time contemplating the second. Two plays, one traditional, the other experimental consider the matter: Jean-Paul Sartre's splendid comedy "Kean" at the Globe Theatre and the brilliant-In teasing "Offending the Audi-ence" by the young German dramatist Peter Handke. Sartre grafted his existential concerns on to Alexandre Dumas's high romantic play about England's most celebrated actor as a vehicle for Pierre Brasseur, nearly 20 years ego. Now, graced with a superb performance by Alan Badel, and crisply trans-lated and directed by Frank Hauser, "Kean" is frequently bilarious and never less than hugely enjoyable. Both plays bring on intellectual vertico. The audience can enjoy not only Badel playing Kean but Badel playing Kean playing Othello, advancing on the footlights to wipe off his makeup and ask who they have come to see, Othello or Kean. They, of course, have come to see Mr. Badel in a part that exactly matches his abilities.

Actorly Actor

He has always been an actorly actor, with a grand manner allied to a keen wit. Here, he alternately inflates and deflates himself as Kean-beset by drink, debts, and the 18th century equivalent of grouples-undergoes that identity crisis endemic to popular heroes and actors, Wondering if he exists outside the characters he plays, be settles in a chair, strikes an attitude, and leaps up with the cry "Richard III," only to settle back and realize that he'e now doing Hamlet. Apart from Mr. Badel, there is an abundance of wit and high spirits, from the sets after the manner of Victorian twopenny colored toy theaters to the acting of Ken Wynne as Kean's long-suffering dresser and Felicity Kendall as his determined seducer. Even more than Handhe, Sertre is unkind to his audience, scornful of its the-atrical taste. I would imagine that he does not have a high opinion of Dumas's original text, but his jibes are so elegantly phrased that it becomes a joy to be insulted.

Mr. Handke wrote "Offending the Audience," the first of bis plays to be translated into English, without either indicating how the lines should be distributed among the actors or including stage directions, Naftali

Group Grope

Mr. Yavin has directed it so that the actions of his players explicitly contradict their words. At one point they offer to perform a play within a play, and then decline on the grounds that it would be impossible since they are not in a play at all. They conduct their most serious arguments whill induiging in a group grope. I'm not sure whether it counts as a failure or success, but the audience refused to react or participate in the event. even under the provocation of Mr. Handke's sillier statements, which included the claim toat a person sitting in the cars watching a conventional play cannot possibly have a meaoingful experience. For my part, I grow tired of being expected to show gratitude when some sweaty experimental actor feeling metaphysical, rushes up the aisle and, depending on his fancy, hits or embraces me.

But the play is well worth going out of your way to see. which is unfortunately necessary, From Monday, it will play for a week at South London's the Oval House, in Kennington, opposite the Oval cricket ground,

At the same sale, a circular punch bowl by Reynier de Haan, made in The Hague in 1778, fetched $2,880. It was of pleasing proportions and, like the sconces, came from the collection of the late Dr. J.H. Smidt de Gelder, but it could not be called a masterpiece by any stretch of the imagination. Abova all, it was just a local adaptation of the traditional British punch bowl. The Dutch innovation consisted chiefly of the addition of a garland and ribbons-borrowed from the French idiom.

Plainly said, the difference in money paid for English and French silver and Dutch silver cannot be accounted for es-thetically. If anything, the esthetic characteristics of Dutch silver should work against it at anction since imitative work is generally less sought after at all periods and in all categories. However, there is a national market in Holland which has been little affected by current conomic conditions.

As soon as the first signs of an economic slump appeared, investors became tighter with their money and the prices of English and French sliver were affected. But the Dutch collectors, prompted by noneco-nomic motives, went on buying. and, as a result, since the supply of Dutch silver is not enormous, prices are still rising.

Silver Plaque

A record or two may well be broken at next week's sale. One of the more remarkable items is a silver plaque of the Entombment which was possibly re-moved from a home altar. John genius. Hayward, a consulting expert of Sotheby's and an authority on silver with many years at the Victoria and Albert Museum, has identified it as an unrecorded plaque by Arent van Bolten of Zwolle, signed with his

The only other work signed by the artist is in the Rijks-museum in Amsterdam. Van Bolten, in spite of relative ob-scurity and the dearth of historical data concerning his activity must have been an out-standing figure in 17tb-cen-tury European art. He is known for a remarkable sketch book preserved at the British Museum; the book shows that he was a draftsman in his own right for some of the sketches are of a purely pictorial vein. This is a tarza or circular shallow how on a stem foot, probably made in Middelburg in 1621. In style it is a bangover of the late Rensissance. The bust of a man locking through prison bars appears in the central roundel in the midst of Italianate scrollwork. A sentence engraved in Dutch in the outer frame says that on March 2, 1567, the Duke of Alba sentenced Gbuilliame Coerten to death but that on March 29 the latter got away wih his wife Marghueriet's help. The Dutchman fought the Spanish invaders and the memory apparently lingered for a long time, since the bowl was done long after the dramatic episode, Richard Came, Sotheby's director of the silver department, says this piece and most of the other Dutch objects, of which a large number is included in the sale, are likely to go back to Holland. In the 18th aod the 19th centuries vast quantities of Dutch silver were amassed by British collectors because they enjoyed it. They are now going the other way because the descendants of their makers see in them symbols of their national identity.

ART IN COLOGNE

Kassak, Galerie Gmurzynska-Bargera, Mauritiussteinweg 74-76, to March 5.

For a long time the social turmoils of the rearing '20s doomed to silence everything else that happened in those years. Rather late we recognize that art after World War I was flourishing all over Europe and not only at the Bauhaus, Russia and other countries of Eastern Europe had an important part in this development: the Rungarlan Lajos Kassak is one of the best representatives of what is now recognized as a forerunner of contemporary art-constructiv-ism. Even before World War I Kassak had decided that civilization needed to find its equivalent in a rational and analytical art. Like Mondrian he followed the cubists' road to its logical abstract-end, but he refused to give any metaphysical meaning to a painting. The solid geometrical shapes in his paintings and collages create their own reality-for Kassak there is nothing "behind" a painting. This principle he stuck to throughout his tife, without losing his creativity. Over 100 works are on view in this exquisite retrospective.

Warhel and Others. Galcrie Zwirner, Albertusstrasse 16, through February.

The gallery is showing its recent purchases, additions which should surprise no one who knows the gallery since they represent Zwirner's longtime favorite artists. When you see "Liz" and "Elvis" there is no mistaking the artist; then, there he is himself-Andy Warhol-four times. No mistake about Roy Lichtenstein either. His "Spray" looks boring and poster-like, but an egg-shaped pic-ture made in 1968, in which he used his screen technique on top and bottom, with a long yellow, vertical line in the middle, is a fresh and well-balanced composition. There is a blue sponge by Yves Klein, machines by Tin-guely, Arman and Konrad Klapheck.

THE CONFESSIONS OF EDWARD DAHLBERG New York: George Braziller. 312 pp. $6.50.

Reviewed by Hilton Kramer

EDWARD Dahlberg is the literary phoenix of his No greater proof generation. exists that Fitzgerald's famous dictum about the absence of "second acts" in American Mie is susceptible to spiendid contradiction. Once. a muchpraised practitioner of that most mythical of American literary enterprises, the "proletarian novel," Dahlberg repudiated not only his early fame but the books on which it was based, consigning himself to years in the wilderness where he virtually began his literary career all over again.

This second career dates from the publication; in his early 40s, of "Do These Bones Live" (1941) an extraordinary book of criticism clearly inspired by D. H. Lawrence's "Studies in Clas-sic American Literature" and William Carlos Williams's "In the American Grain" and emi-nently worthy of taking its place beside them. (This book was revised and reissued in 1960 under the title of "Can These Bones Live.") Next came "The Fies of Sodom" (1950) and "The Sorrows of Priapus" (1957), the "prophetic books" in which Dahlberg perfected his style and which began to win for him a new "underground" reputation. But it is only in the last decade, since the pub-lication of "Truth Is More Sacred" (1961), an exchange of letters with Sir Herbert Read on the value of modern literature, that Dahlberg has reemerged as something of a cuit figure, recipient of the kind. of homage that is reserved. in our literary culture, for authors who are at once venerable, difficult, a little odd and very little read.

Here, clearly, is a literary phenomenon worth pondering, especially since the writer who is now said to please so many diverse critical tastes is not always entirely recognizable in the chorus of praise currently being lavished upon his every ptterance.

Consider this latest volum Dahlberg's ninth book (not counting "The Edward Dahl-berg Reader") in seven years. the details about the role of status in the Communist liter-ary world-but, for the most Though it contains fugitive elements of both genres, "The Con-fessions" is neither a convenpart, Dahlberg is too completely tional memoir nor a standard autobiography. His profound hatred of modern. literature,-moreover, makes Like all the books of his later even his praise of certain writers years-with the important ex-ception of "Because I Was a little suspect. What, then, constitutes the appeal of such a splenetic and Flesh" (1964), his masterpiece-"The Confessions" is a highly personal form of baroque serquarrelsome writer? The usual answer is what else?-style. And Dahlberg's prose style is, monisiog, a collage of sacred texts, lacerating aphorisms, dowr prophecies and pitiless without question, a remarkable literary phenomenon. "Long age ruminations on the follies of proposed to employ words that gave joy to my ears, even if some are archaic," he writes the human species. "At mineteen I was a stranger to myself. At forty I asked: "The Confessions." "Never 'n Who sun I? At fifty I conmind the jeers; I don't care cluded I would never know." a whit about them." It is a style that not only affronts history but at least he is not going to suffer any surfeit of quotidian detail. Chronologically, the book covers Dahlberg's life from tries to dissolve it in favor of that mythic realm of discourse in which the events of our own the age of 19, when he arrived in Los Angeles down and out make his way in the world, time, even the events of our to the late '30s, when he broke with the Communist literary own lives, can be recast in the eye of eternity. world in New York and thus brought his first career to a Mr. Kramer is art news edigrinding halt in a clash of tor of The New York Times. But the chronological frame work of "The Confessions" rarely allowed to obtrude Dabiberg's real concern in thibook, which is not only ta recount his sufferings but to transform them into the ab street revelations of a myth Especially in "The Prentice Years," the long opening section that constitutes nearly twothirds of "The Confessions," every painful memory-and it Dahlberg's case, every memory is painful-is pressed for whatever measure of dark wisdom it may yield about life itself Every detail of his conditionthe unshated poverty, the terrelieved loneliness, even the familiar frustrations of the young aspiring writer-is generalize ed and allegorized into z. fable of defeat.

I doubt if the basic scenario of "The Prentice Years" will be entirely comprehensible to readers unfamiliar with "Because I Was Flesh," the first volume of Dahlberg's suitoblog-raphy. In that great book-a masterpiece of Oedipal passion -Dahlberg returned to the ma-terials of his first novel, "Hottom Dogs" (1930), now dismis-sed in "The Confessions" as "my dunghill fiction," to retell the story of his mother, Limie, a luckless lady barber in Kansa City, and of his own miserable childhood passed in orphanages in Kansas City and Cleveland. In the second and third sections of "The Confessions"-the one covering his expatriate period in Paris and London in the late twenties, the other on the thirtles in New York-villainy abounds, but there is little credible shading. We are given. not history, but a morality play in which the author's tortured virtue is under constant temptation from the rogues of the literary world.

There are some marvelous things in these later chapters of "The Confessions"—the story of how D. H. Lawrence was cajoled into writing an introduction to "Bottom Dogs," the account of the hunger march in Washington and some of Fifteen-year-old Jan Hoffman of East Germany took fourth place.

Austria's 19-year-old Beatrix Schuba took a commanding lead in her quest for the women's title at the European Figure Skating champlonships. She had been favored for the crown of retired world and European champion Gabriel Seyfert of East Germany.

Miss Schuba completed today's three compulsory figures with a total of 1,237.7 points and a perfect ordinal of nine for the six compulsories, meaning all nine judges had ranked her first.

Rita Trapanese of Italy was second with 22 ordinals and 1.118.7 points.

Although Miss Schuba is known to be less formidable in the free skating half of the championships, scheduled tomorrow night, her 119-point lead virtually clinches the title

Too Dangerous The men's downhill, which has been thrown off the schedule, was originally set for this weekend in Murren, Switzerland. Poor weather conditions and a poor course caused that race to be moved here. On Wednesday, the Swiss team protest-ed that the downhill here was too dangerous because of a long, toy and steep course which was too ast

Art Buchwald The Largest Embassy

WASHINGTON.—Word from Cambodia is that United States military teams assigned to check on American military aid will be dressed in civilian clothes and ettached to the United States Embassy at Phnom Penh. It has been made perfectly clear that these military teams are not advisers and that they are not violating the "spirit of the law" of the Cooper-

Church amendment. If things Buchwald continue the way they're going. Cambodia may soon havs the largest American embassy in the world. I would not be surprised to read the following dispatches from this part of the world: PHNOM PENH. Cambodia, Feb. 12.—Five hundred commercial attachés arrived here today at Phnom Penh atrport. U.S. Ambassador Emory S. Swank explained to reporters that trade with Cambodia has reached an all-time high and he needed the extra personnel to negotiate tariff agreements with Cambodian officials.

The 500 commercial attachés. all carrying briefcases and wearing identical seersucker sults, marched the five miles from the airport in double time, led by the U.S. Commercial Attaché Band.

PHNOM PENH, Cambodia, March 3.—One thousand USIA employees were flown in to Phnom Penh last night to beef up the 500 commercial attaches that wers assigned to the American Embossy last month.

An American spokesman explained that the USIA is stepping up its information activities for schoolchildren in Cambodia, and that the 1.000 new employees will all be assigned to the new USIA library, which

MOSCOW, Feb. 5 (Reuters).--One of Islam's holiest shrines in Centr.' Asia, the Shahi-Zinda Mausoleum in Samarkand, is 400 years older than was previously believed, according to local archaeologists. Up to now the building on the site outside the ancient city was thought to have been begun at the end of the 14th century in the reign of Tameriane, is being built underground on the outskirts of the capital. PHNOM PENH, Cambodia, April 30.—Five thousand cultural-affairs officers were airlifted into this Cambodian capital today. On hand to greet them were Ambassador Emory C. Swank and Premier Lon Nol. The cultural affairs officers, all carrying violin cases, were lined up on the runway and reviewed in a jeep by Premier Nol.

After the review, the chief cultural-affairs officer. "Bull" Thorndike, told Lon Nol, "No country deserves culture more than Cambodia, and my men are bere to see that you get it. And we'll stay here until the dirty job is done." PHNOM PENH, July 12.-The State Department has broken ground for the largest United States embassy building ever constructed. The embassy will comprise a 5.000 acre complex, and the main building, shaped like a Pentagon, will be able to accommodate 50.000 American Embassy employees now working in Cambdia in Cambodia. The State Department explained that the reasons for expansion were the unusually heavy demand for visas and passports as well as the increase in embassy diplamatic communications.

"We found," sald Ambassador Swank. "that our former twostory chancellery was not large ecough to handle all the embassy's business. The new building will allow us to expedite tourist requests as well as have a place where we can hold exhibits showing the American way of life." PHNOM PENH. Cambodia. Nov. 13.—A United States Marine guard detail composed of 100.000 men and officers was landed in Phnom Penh today. Secretary of State William Rogers revealed the increase in the Marine guard detail was needed after two Cambodians had broken into the embassy PX and stolen three Japanese cameras.

He believes the new security measures will discourage any such thefts in the future. He told reporters, "The security of a United States embassy is the first consideration of this country, and as long as I am secretary of state I will see that our brave diplomats have all the protection they need."

'Paris has suffered no accidental or military ravages since the Viking raids of the 9th century.... Her only destroyers have been her inhabitants,' Pierre Couperie is quoted as saying in 'Paris des Utopies.'

Plans for Paris: Loony and Lucid

PARIS.—"Paris des Utopies." a curious book by the art historian Yva 1 Christ, was recently published in Paris by André Balland. A study of Paris as it might have been, "Paris des Utopies" (Utopian Paris) is a well-illustrated selection of prajects, both loony and lucid, that have been suggested by four centuries of architects and city planners. The most set-upon part of Paris is the oldest, the lle de la Cité. It has variously been suggested that its western tip-the Place Dauphine, Pont Neuf and Vert-Galant park-be transformed by rich buildings, statues, fountains, obelisks and triumphal arches honoring, according to the period, a king, emperor or republic. Utopians often are imbued with a misplaced touch of practicality: one of them, Guy de Gisors, suggested in 1804 that by razing the western tip of the island a public bath with 76 cabins could be erected.

Mr. Christ describes a Utopian architect' or clty planner as one whose plans were never used. Gustave Riffel, for example, with his outrageous plan for his tower, has the authentic sound of a Utopian, but his tower, happily, went up. Baron Haussmann, Mr. Christ says, was the only man empowered to realize his Utopia—Paris's first and, dare one hope it, last wholesale reformer. But for Waterloo, he biggest reformer of all would have been Napoleon, who sighed, "If heaven had only given me 20 years, there wouldn't have been a trace left of the old Paris."

Utopians are determined men. It took three centuries of planning finally to connect the Louvre and Tuileries palaces —a junction destroyed in minutes when the Tuileries was blown up during the Commune. One of Mr. Christ's most determined dreamers was Bernard Poyet, who was obsessed by a plan to improve the Place de la Concorde, which he found wanting.

First Poyet submitted plans full of royal pomp, colonnades and majestic vistas to Louis XVI. Unfortunately, the year was 1789, During the Consulate, Poyet resurfaced with new plans: his grand buildings would become temples to Liberty and Peace and Harmony, and in place of the statue of Louis XV there would be one featuring a charlot in which Victory leads the Arts and Sciences to the Temples of Peace and Concord.

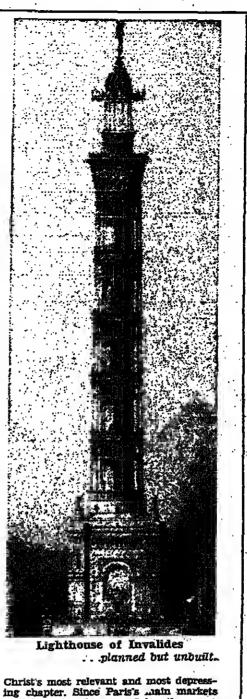

It's hard to regret that Poyet didn't make it. On the other hand one wishes some of the other architects had been successful. If Pierre Constant dTvry had had his way, the Hôtel de Ville (City Hall) of Paris would be a handsome 18th-century structure on the Left Bank's Quai Malaquais. Jules Hardouin-Mansart suggested rdding a fine colonnade, not unlike the one at St. Peter's in Rome, to the Invalides, and even Napoleon had the good idea of adding many fountains to the cityscape.

Other immodest proposals, had they gone through, would have made Paris as jaunty and gay as a fairground. In 1885, Jules Bourdais daftly decided that the Invalides area badly needed an immensely tall lighthouse with a museum of electricity at its summit. Hydroelectric power would be supplied by dams and machines in the Seine. Alas, poor Bourdais!

In 1801 Pierre Girand proposed a vast sepulcher on the Champs-Elysées—a perfect location, he noted, to inspire passersby with sweet melancholy as they contemplate the last resting place of virtuous men. A pyramid-like structure, the sepulcher would be surrounded by a colonnade made of human bones.

Also on the Champs-Elysées, the architect Sobre, a disciple of Ledoux, recommended that a hemispheric Temple of Immortality be built over a newly created large lake. The reflection of the temple in the water would create the illusion of a sphere.

Then there was the elephant period. If various architects had had their way, there would have been a commodious reproduction of an elephant at the Etoile (1758) instead of the present dreary triumphal arch. Another elephant would have been at the summit of ths hill of Chaillot (1806: and the Bastille would have had one in 1809 (Victor Hugo's Gavroche hid in the rotting maquette of the Bastille elephant in 1832). The quarter of Les Halles provides Mr.

ing chapter. Since Paris's main markets moved to Rungis, near Orly, the most desperate plans have been suggested for "improving" the area. Hopelessiy, Mr. Christ suggests that the result will be a "pocket-sized Brasilia."

Anyone who lives amid contemporary French architecture must be depressed by its poverty. Mr. Christ reproduces with little comment—none is really needed some present-day architects' ideas and also republishes some Le Corhusier plans for Paris which are as bad in their way as anything proposed by Viollet-le-Duc.

PEOPLE:

Ever since they dubbed the hid "Agostino the Mad". We ve been wondering why. "Agosti-no," sure: anyone who can stand cosmopolitan Naples on its car through sheer virtuosity behind the wheel of a motor-cycle -- leaping his mechanized adagio over sidewalk-café tables, setting off three straight nights of street riots, turning on a lira and leering on every turn at frustrated carabinieri left clutching at the air-is surely entitled to burn a hunk of nickname from Italian racing champion Giacomo Agostini. But 'Mad"? The fuzz, now. they were mad, and maybe the boy himself was a hit put out when they tracked him down as 17-year-old Antonio Mellini and hauled him in on 12 or 14 charges of disturbing the peace. On the other hand, as a first offender Mellini was sprung almost immediately, while intel-lectuals of every stripe halled him as a "youth symbol." a "folk idol," an "anti-hero." Maybe it was the "anti-hero" bit that put his nose out of joint, but when the offers start-ed pouring in 4 a publisher wants him to ghost-write his autobiography; a music com-pany wants him to cut some rock records; a producer wants him to star in his own life story, tentatively entitled "The Midnight Motorcyclist" — Agostino had to figurs like Bernie Cornfeld that for anti-beroes, did, it's a seller's market. So anyway, what makes Agostino so damn mad? The answer, it turns out, is as simple as it is touching. Interviewed by the AP the other day on the occasion of his motoreic rise. to fame, Agostino was a sked, among other searching probes into his complex : psyche, whether he had any girlfriends. "I had a lot," he answerd. "but most of them left me because they were afraid of my bike. And I got rid of soma others." Why, parsued the AF, did he get rid of the others? Agostino. it is reported, turned purple with rage. "I got rid of them," he roared, "because they left fingerprints on my motorcycle!"
